HARVARD
MEDICAL SCHOOL

Soaking in a bathtub or basking in a sauna can be a pleasant way to relax. Done on a regular basis, both habits may also help prevent heart attacks and strokes, according to several studies."The high temperatures in a warm tub or sauna cause your blood vessels to dilate, which lowers blood pressure," says Dr. Adolph Hutter, professor of medicine at Harvard Medical School. The volume of blood your heart pumps will also rise, especially in a hot tub. That's a result of the pressure of the water on the body, which increases the heart's workload, he explains.

"We purchased a house with an old tile shower in the master bathroom. We purchased the Boca Walk-in Tub for our mom. Showers were exhausting for her. The Boca tub allows her to shower or take a bath (which she had not been able to do for years) while seated. The installer was very pleasant to work with a went about his task efficiently. The bathroom has old floor tile. Some of the tiles next to where the tub would sit popped out during the demo of the shower in preparation for the tub. The installer came up with a brilliant temporary solution for us. He used a section of the wall surround, which we also purchased with the tub, and put a strip on the floor between the tub and the tile floor. It looks like it belongs. This will take care of the floor until we can afford to replace it. We have only had the tub for just over a month but are very pleased so far."
